Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have two young sons, ages one and two years. They have had their necessary baby shots. What I'm concerned with is which shots they need next at which ages? I know I don't have to have them vaccinated against smallpox, but I still would like to — Mrs. L.R. L.R.

I fear we have become somewhat lax in this whole matter of immunization. We are pediatricians at the University of Colorado Medical Center, states in a recent article that the decline in immunization of pre-school children has been alarming. Surveys show that about five million of the nearly 14 million 1 to 4 year-olds are not adequately protected. That is about one in three of the pre-schoolers. Here is Dr. Kempe's suggestion: Diphtheria, tetanus toxoid and pertussis (whooping cough) — at two months, and
